

RACHMANINOFF WINS FRESH ACCLAIM

Rachmaninoff, who will play here at the auditorium tomorrow evening, at 8:30, direction Steers & Coman, has just won fresh laurels in Los Angeles, when he gave his recital there February 13:

"The super-pianist-composer, Sergei Rachmaninoff, actually played a large audience off its feet at Philharmonic auditorium last night and demonstrated the fact that we are undoubtedly entering upon a new extension of expression, a dimension which is not so easily reviewed as realized in performance."—Carl Bronson of the Los Angeles Herald and Express, February 14.

"Sergei Rachmaninoff, the justly famous Russian pianist, held an audience enthralled at the Philharmonic auditorium last night. One cannot criticise what one thinks well-nigh perfect. One can only call to assistance those adjectives which convey to the mind that which perfection means. And so in the relating of such consistently brilliant playing, it is difficult to do much else than describe the attitude of the audience and the compositions played."—Miriam Geiger, Los Angeles Record, February 14.

"The full audience which turns out each time Rachmaninoff plays here was a welcome sight, indeed, for there have been few soloists this season to draw the crowd that graced the hall at Fifth and Olive streets. Rachmaninoff, as always, displayed his splendid musicianship. His playing is something to be spoken about in hushed whispers."—Los Angeles Examiner, February 10.
