

As one thinks of the wonderful piano concert given Tuesday night at Memorial hall by that master pianist, Sergel Rachmaninoff, he feels that he sat through a lovely poem. Rachmaninoff is an artist, a thoroughbred musician, who has the happy faculty of making his music live. When he finished playing the Beethoven "Appassionata" one woman in the audience turned to another and said, "Honestly, I feel actually dizzy; that music was so fine." The entire evening was a revelation of what one man could do with the piano. Rachmaninoff never plays modern things, and he interprets the works of the masters in his own original way. It is to be hoped that Springfielders will have the opportunity of hearing him again next season. The group of his own compositions were especially well received.
